A New Year's Song.

The world is full of mystery. Which no one understands;
What is before our eyes we see.
The work of unseen hands;
But whence and when, and why they wrought,
Escapes the grasp of human thought.

And there will be again—
When we must cease and be forgot,
With all our joy and pain.
Gone like the wind, or like the snow That fell a thousand years ago. We live as if we should not die,

There was a time when we were not,

Blindly, but wisely, too; For if we know Death always nigh, What would we say or do, But fold our hands, and close our eyes, And care no more who lives or dies. If death to each man in his turn

Is coming soon or late, Be ours the soldier's unconcern And his courageous fate ; Better to perish in the strife Than to preserve the coward's life. Before my heart's fire pondering long.

As 'twere a bivouse Theard last night the solemn song.
Which I have summoned back.
It seems my sombre mood to cheer.
And is my greating to the Year. New Year, if you are bringing Youth, As you are bringing Age, I would have it back, in sooth ; I have no strength to wage

Lost battles over. Let them be, Bury your dead, O Memory. You can bring nothing but surprise, And nothing will dismay; No tears again in these old eyes— No darkness in my day. You might bring light and smiles instead

If you could give me back my dead. I have beheld your kiss, New Year, Full fifty times, and none That was so happy and so dear,

I wept when I was done, Why should we weep when years depart. And leave their sakes in the heart?

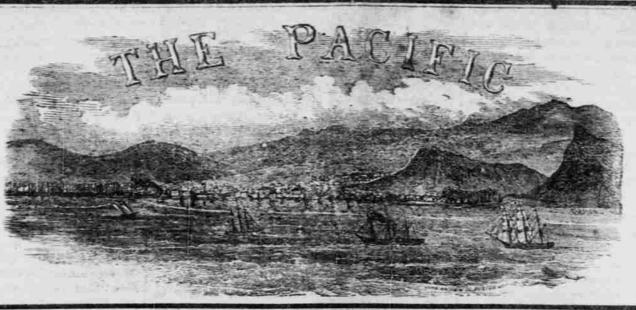

Good-bye, since you are gone, Old Year.
And my past life, good bye.
I shed no tear upon your bier
For it is well to die.
New Year, your worst will be my best,
What can an old man want but rest? -R H. STODDARD.

The Overland Journey A Fraud-

"There ain't no bottling up of things about me. This overland journey's a fraud, nothing but a fraud sir, and yer oughter know it. Don't tell me. It's a fraud. The ring must be busted up. Where are yer buffalers? Perhaps you'll tell me that them cows is buffalers. They uin't. Where are your prairie dogs? They ain't dogs, to begin with—they're squirrels. Ain't you ashamed to call them mean little cusses dogs? But where are they? There ain't none. Where are your grizzilies? You might have imported a few grizzilies to keep up the name of your railroad. Where are yer herds of antelopes scudding before the advancing train? Nary an antelope have you fur to scud. Rocky mountains, sir! They ain't rocky at all. They're flat as my hand. Where are your savage garges? I can't see none. Where are your wild Injuns? Do you call them loafing tramps in dirty blankets Injuns! My belief is that they're greasers looking out for an engagement as song and dance men. They're beats, sir, 'dead beats;' they are 'pudeocas,' and you oughter to be told so." I didn't know it; nor could I discern why I ought to be told so. But there was no pacifying the Implacable man. Sometimes he would confront me with an open guide book, and pointing sternly to a page, would say, "Where are yer coyotes, sir? I'll trouble you for a pack of walves as makes night hideous with their hawling. Did anything howl last night, sir, except the wind? Where are your pumas and your cougars? Show 'em to me. There's nothing in it. It's as easy as going from Jersey City to Philadelphia, and the whole thing's a fraud."-America Revisited-Sala.

The "Marseillaise."

The French national anthem, written as a war song for the army of the Rhine, was contaminated with blood. Deitrich, the Mayor of Strasburg, in whose house it was composed, and whose daughters first sung it, was shortly afterwards guillotined to its tune. Madame de l'Isle was horrified at the idea of her son's name being connected with a song sung by the brigands marching through France; and the author himself first learned the n me given to his work as he was flying for his life through the passes of the Alps. It is evident that one of the verses of this celebrated anthem was not written at the same time as the others, as it was intended for the voices of children anxious to embrace the career of arms, to replace their fathers when they fell and to inherit their virtues. For a long time it was thought that Rouget de l'Isle had himself added this verse, which was afterwards attributed to Andre Cherrier (who was guillotined) and to other poets. A controversy which has just taken place in the French press on this subject has brought to light the following curious facts :- " The author of the magnificent couplet celled 'Les Infents,' was a professor of the College of Vienne in the department of the Isere, a priest of the name of Antone Pessonneaux The poor poet who died at the age of 74 bitterly regretted having contributed to that hymn which accompanied to the scatfold the victims of the Reign of Terror. But in 1792 he was only 32 years of age; like the young ING. Boots Show Har CLOTHcaptain of engineers, he was pleased with the new ideas; and, like Rouget de IIsle, he thought only of conquering Austria, and of animating the courage of the soldiers of France. In Lyons the revolutionary tribunal had been established. In one of the halls of the Hotel de Ville seven judges sat round a table covered with a black cloth. They each wore round the neck a small silver axe. If the judges spread out their hands on the table, that meant that the prisoner was to be set free; the hand raised to the forehead, that he was to be shot; and when the silver axe was touched that he was to be sent to the guillotine." A silent and expeditive verdict, no doubt borrowed from the Romans. "A citizen was dr gged before the court. What was his crime? The prisoner was a priest. To the President's question-Who art thou? the wretched man drew himself up proudly, and replied, I am the Abbe Pessonneaux, author of the 1-st couplet of the "Marsaillaise." There was a good deal of emotion in the hell; soldiers and gaolers awaited the verdict with anxiety. Slowly the seven hands were lowered to the tible, Pessonneaux swed his life to his coup-
